

Hello there. You are on a page for the company Twilight Insights. To give a background in case you haven't been to any one of our news pages let me explain what we do here. We here at Twilight Insights try to figure out if there is a deeper meaning to media pieces made for younger audiences. So we pride ourselves in trying to show you certain media pieces for younger people aren't as colorful as they seem. Our topic here today is the most recent game by See you Online Studios, called : Hugo's Downfall. The sequel to Hugo's Uprising. Now it is time for

THE DARKER SIDE OF HUGO'S DOWNFALL

Now some of you don't know who See You Online Studios is. So let's give a background on them. They are a multimedia company that is mostly known for video games. They made great games like Gears of Steam, Science Of War, and the trilogy A Flame's Spirit. These are all great games that come out completely finished. How many times does that happen nowadays? The company has 3 CEOs but the one who had the most involvement in these two games is a guy who goes by the name Vangelis. He is the main story writer and lead animator.

The biggest draw of these two Hugo games is they are huge crossover games. The main franchises being Sonic, Mario, Metroid and Legend Of Zelda. The games that supposedly take place after these will never mention this again. It only remains canon to the sonic universe. I guess company CEO Vangelis has preferences.

Because these are all family friendly franchises most of the time you think there would be not too much more to that. The thing is though both games there are actually way more hints toward there being a darker version then most other ones we cover. Going to stick to Hugo's Downfall because that is the more recent one and has more hints that this darker version exists. So let's dive into why Hugo's Downfall has a darker version of the game they don't want you to see. We currently have three big examples here that support the existence of a darker version. There are many more but these are the big ones.

First off, one of the biggest draws of the marketing was that there were more crossover characters than the first game. Secondly, a completely new character was introduced called Skelagon. Hugo actually made him an extremely long time ago. Hugo trapped him and now reawakened him. Skelagon was a humanoid skeleton dragon hybrid creature like the one depicted below. Also these aren't images from the actual game it is images that resemble it so See You Online doesn't copyright strike us. They normally don't copyright strike stuff anyway but we don't want to risk it.

This was a character that was introduced at the end of Hugo's Uprising as a terrifying character and functioned as a teaser for the sequel. Hugo called him Skelagon. Skelagon only appears in cutscenes. He isn't in the gameplay because what we know about him is that he is a violent monster. There is even a chase sequence with him where he is chasing you, but it gets cut short, and it isn't really a chase. Sounds to me he would be too scary for younger audiences. I mean his design is a humanoid skeleton dragon after all. This is one of the few times See You Online is making a family friendly game, so it is a very weird choice to include a new original character like this if he does almost nothing.

If there was this uncensored version this character would be in the game a lot more. Like that chase sequence thing with him would be playable. As well as him actually doing stuff that would affect the story, or having him be the reason why certain things in the game play out the way they do that weren't explained.

Something else that wasn't explained was, there is a plot thread where Skelagon infects Hugo with something that makes Hugo act really out of character at certain points. which basically means he will do very evil stuff from time to time. His normal personality is very much nonviolent a lot of the time. Because Hugo is very nice there are scenes like this one where the thing he is infected with takes over. This causes him to do very intense stuff supposedly.

In this part of the game Hugo grabs the other villain by the neck. Then Hugo flies them both really high in the air and Hugo gets out his sword. Instead of using his sword, Hugo instead drops the other villain. They are killing off this villain but it seemed like there was more to this. This implies the dedication of the creator to ensure that this game is censored enough to maintain an E for everyone rating and doesn't go higher than that.

If there was a version of this scene that wasn't censored then this would go very differently. Like maybe Hugo would use his sword to do a killing move. Like maybe moving his hand down and bringing the sword to his neck or something. Then he would drop the other villain. With him maybe falling with a massive gash wound or something like that. We have basically no context for what Skelagon infects Hugo with. If this darker version were to exist it would most likely explain exactly what this is and why Skelagon's plan of infecting Hugo with this works. Because we have no clue otherwise.

This scene goes black and white because it is transitioning to fully black and after the screen goes fully black you hear a scream. After this scene the other villain that Hugo supposedly stabbed has his arm in a cast the rest of the game.

Of course if this scene was uncensored it would actually show Hugo stabbing him. It is just in the arm though so I have no idea why they needed to cut this part, because that isn't as graphic as supposedly that other part with Hugo was.

We here at Twilight Insights hope we have convinced you that this game has a secret dark version. Also see you online studios didn't confirm it directly but they said "We need funding to add big stuff in the game." This is another point because they said big stuff not stuff like bug fixes. As well as the fact their track record proves they don't do downloadable content in terms of huge updates.

Now see you online studios haven't set up an official way for them to get more funding for most likely this darker version so it is up to us. We call it "First DLC for their games". We really need to fire the person who came up with that name. Anyway it is 5 dollars a month to subscribe and if we get 50 million dollars from it we will personally send it to the company so they have money to make the DLC. Click here to sign up now.

There are many other hints about this uncensored version but we don't have time to get into that now. You can find other examples yourself. The game has only been out for a week though so there are probably way more that we missed. Be sure to sign up for the funding program and we hope we convinced you.
